Briefing on the Inter-Burundian Dialogue in Bujumbura

In late April, the Facilitator of the Inter-Burundian Dialogue, former president Benjamin Mkapa announced a series of briefings with Burundian stakeholders that did not attend the previous meeting in Arusha<sup>1</sup>. In this regard, the facilitation team led by Ambassador Francis Mndolwa met faith based groups, registered civil society and some political parties in Bujumbura on 3 May 2017. Participants were informed about the main points discussed in Arusha. The Facilitation team suggested the amendment of the constitution initiated by the government should be discussed and agreed upon by all parties in Burundi.

Guterres appoints a new Burundi Envoy

On 5 May 2017, the UN Secretary General Antonio Guterres appointed former President of Burkina Faso, President Michel Kafando, as his special envoy in replacement of Jamal Benomar who was rejected by the government of Burundi in late November 2016. “Mr. Kafando’s role will include leading and coordinating the United Nations political efforts to promote peace and sustainable development in Burundi. Furthermore, he will provide assistance to the efforts of the East African Community for political dialogue among Burundi role players”<sup>2</sup>. Whereas the government of Burundi welcomed President Kafando, opposition raised concerns that Kafando will have his office in Burkina Faso, making it difficult for him to follow and understand on the ground realities, far away in Burundi

Hate speech

Despite the ruling CNDD-FDDF arguing that the Imborekaure song calling for rape of rivals in Ntega was an isolated<sup>3</sup> incident, the “Terinda abakeba bavyare imbonekakure” (impregnate rivals so that they give birth to Imbonerakure) song is widely used and repeated at many gathering as it was proven on 6 May 2017 as thousands of new members joined the CNDD-FDD in Bujumbura. Once again, a video footage showing Imbonerakure singing the infamous song was uploaded on social media.
